Engine Mounts

Normally one car has Front Engine Mount, Rear Engine Mount, Left Engine Mount and Right Engine Mount, some may have only two or three engine mounts in one car, its depends on the car engine design, some cars with more powerful engines may require additional engine mounts to provide extra support and stability.

There are several different types of engine mounts:

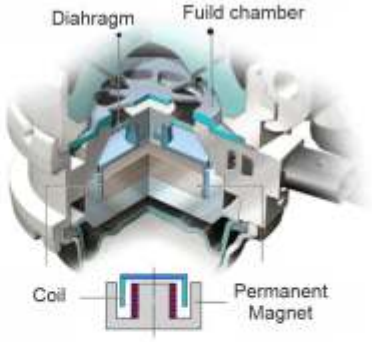

(a) Traditional rubber mounts
(b) Torque strut mount
(c) Engine mount bracket
(d) Hydraulic mounts
(e) Active and inductive engine mount.

Traditional rubber mounts and torque mount are the most common type of engine mount and are mostly made of rubber and metal that provide a good balance of support and vibration dampening.

Hydraulic mounts use fluid-filled chambers to further reduce vibrations and provide additional support for the engine. inductive mounts use sensors and actuators to actively adjust the stiffness of the mount in response to changing driving conditions, providing even greater levels of vibration isolation and performance.
